Explanation of declaration

You must have been continuously resident abroad for at least one year in order to import your personal property without paying import and customs duty. You must have personally owned the property abroad. You must import the personal property within a short time after moving to Norway and you must submit a declaration at the same time as the personal property is cleared by customs.

You must enclose a list of all the goods you are bringing in with you together with this declaration. The list must state whether the goods are new or used. If you bring in new goods, you must pay the VAT and any customs and special duties due on these.

No customs and VAT duty exemptions apply to vehicles, aircraft, work equipment, foodstuffs, alcohol or tobacco products. If you are bringing in such products, you must specify these in point 3.

You must state whether or not you are bringing in a television, DVD or Blue Ray player, or similar equipment. This is due to the rules concerning television licences and inspecting electrical equipment that is imported into Norway. This must be specified under point 4.

Bringing in weapons or ammunition requires the permission of the police, which you must enclose with this declaration. This must be specified under point 5.

Special customs duty exemptions apply to any used boats you intend to import when you move to Norway. You must submit a special written application regarding this.

You must submit this declaration concerning the importation of personal property to Norwegian Customs and Excise when the goods are being cleared by customs.
